Hearing Held On Assault Charge Today

A hearing was held this morning at 11:00 o'clock in the chambers of Judge Robert O. Miller concerning a charge of assault and battery lodged against Bob Ward. Ward is charged in the complaint with physical abuse to his wife Barbara and with firing a shotgun into the ceiling of the home at 1509 Sycamore Street.

The incident allegedly occurred at 6:00 p.m. on Tuesday. This morning an examining trial was waived by Ward's attorney John Gregory and Ward was released on cash bond of $500. He also made a cash people bond of $500.

County police have been alerted to find a person known only as "Archie" who is wanted for questioning in regard to frightening an ant on Highway 121 West this week and is thought to be in contact with someone in a cabin on Kentucky Lake.

"Archie" is said to be about fifty, white, grey crew cut hair, weighing 160 - 170, wearing brown clothing with a dirty white tee-shirt.

He may be just passing through this area, it was reported.

Murray Children Just Like To Read

Children in Murray are proving that they like to read. The Rocket Reading Club has 187 registered members and has four crews accumulating points every minute the library is open "for a trip to the moon." Apollo reads with 250 points and the other teams are in the second stage of their flight with Surveyor I, 249; Saturn I, 207; and Ranger V is no longer last with 212.

Points are awarded crews when their members attend story hour, 90 children were in the three groups who listened to stories told by Billy Rayburn, Gerald Dunbar, Joyce Smotherman, Billie Wallace and Dulcie Douglas.

The Piglet Family, Rocket to the Moon, and Gone is Gone were some of the stories the children heard and James Fey played a tape made by children who are members of the Rocket Reading Club. Coleman Moss, Teresa Adams, Jan Fee, Joyce Wooden, Joy West and John James read parts from Peter Pan and will participate in a radio program later in the summer. Story hour will be held today and will feature James Knight who will teach bird calls and tell the story about the Baltimore Oriole and its nest.

Ward Mulls Over Wren Testimony

By JOSEPH VARILLA

United Press International
FRANKFORT, Ky. (UPI)—State Highway Commissioner Henry Ward today mullied over conflicting testimony in the Clyde Wren case and wondered what happened to the department's distribution system.

Wren, a 31-year old truck driver from Dry Ridge, has charged that he was fired from his Highway Department job because he refused to contribute to the primary campaign of gubernatorial candidate Edward T. Breathitt Jr.

But his former superiors denied the charges Tuesday afternoon during a special hearing conducted by Ward. They said no coercion was used and that contributions were on a voluntary basis.

Three witnesses whom Wren brought along to the hearing backed up his remarks. Other Highway Department workers from the district said they gave because they wanted to give.

One thing did emerge crystal clear from the hearings—the department's distribution system doesn't work the way Ward had thought it worked. He had issued two memoranda during the campaign which pointed out that all political contributions were to be voluntary. The memoranda further stipulated that any attempt to coerce employees should be reported directly and immediately to Ward.

The testimony that developed about Wren's attitude was just as conflicting as the testimony about whether coercion had been used. Highway Department officials maintained when Wren first made his charge that he was fired because he had a "bad attitude."

Wren has contended that the firing had ruined his reputation and implied that the Highway Department was out to keep him from getting other work. He said he had "heard" that he wasn't given a job with a construction company because the company had been visited by department officials. But, under questioning, he said he heard this from his brother who heard it from "someone else."

Ward said at the end of the hearing that he still has some matters he wants to check. He said he found out Tuesday that Wren had collected about $500 in overtime pay during the winter.

Chandler May Support GOP Nominee

United Press International
BOWLING GREEN, Ky. (UPI)—

Former Gov. A. B. Chandler said Tuesday night it is possible that he may support the Republican nominee for governor, Louie B. Nunn, in the fall election.

Chandler was tearfully appreciative of his support during a speech here at what was billed as a birthday celebration for area friends unable to attend the party at his Versailles home on Sunday.

The Chandler meeting itself was evidence of a rift within the Democratic party.

At the very moment the former governor was threatening to jump the political fence for the gubernatorial election, Democratic nominee Edward T. Breathitt Jr. was conducting his own rally across town.

The candidate, trying to soothe fears of Democratic leaders and office holders from Warren and neighboring counties, said his party is strong and in harmony for the campaign.

Breathitt's running mate, Harry Lee Waterfield, also made party discipline the main feature of his talk when he described the 1963 gubernatorial campaign as the best opportunity Democratic leaders have had to unite the party in 25 years.

Master of ceremonies for the Chandler affair was state Sen. Rex Logan, D-Smiths Grove, an outspoken critic of the Combs administration who openly supported GOP Sen. Thurston B. Morton against Lt. Gov. Wilson W. Wyatt in last year's senatorial race.

Four Sisters Die As Home Consumed

United Press International
POMEROY, Ohio (UPI)—The bodies of four young sisters were recovered from the ashes of their home near here today as the Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation probed the cause of the pre-dawn fire which killed them.

The victims were identified as Loretta Large, 10, and her sisters, Violet Kathleen, 8, Barbara Allen, 6, and Rosella Large, 4, and two brothers, James Monroe, 12, and Clinton, 11, were released from a hospital after treatment for minor injuries.

The father told authorities he awakened to find the house enveloped in flames. He walked half a mile to the nearest neighbors to notify the Rutland Township Fire Department.

The house, located off Ohio 124 about 10 miles west of this, South-eastern Ohio town, was described as old and highly-susceptible to fire.

Pultz said he had reached no conclusion about the fire but that "something about it just doesn't jibe."

He said James had told him and Sheriff Robert O. Hartenbach that the girls were following behind him as he went to an upstairs window to jump to safety.

"But," said Pultz, "from their positions the girls were still in bed face down. The bodies of the older girls were separated on one side of the frame building, while the younger ones were in bed together on the other side."

Hartenbach said the blaze may have been caused by faulty wiring. "I don't think anything is wrong," he said, "but nevertheless we don't want to leave anything go."

Woman's World

Dear Abby . . .

Hop To It -- Now!

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Recently I answered my door and was confronted by a woman who insisted that I KNEW her. When I told her I didn't, she seemed offended, and kept me guessing for some time. It was most embarrassing. She turned out to be an old schoolmate I hadn't seen in FORTY-ONE years! Really now, Abby, we weren't that close in the first place and hadn't had any contact in all that time. It was good to see her again, but wasn't she presumptuous to have expected me to remember her? She had the advantage over me because she had been told where I was living. How does one tactfully handle the idiotic question, "I'll bet you don't remember me, do you?"

EMBARRASSED
DEAR EMBARRASSED: With the forthright honest reply, "Perhaps I should but I'm sorry I don't. Who ARE you?"

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have three children under five years old. Several times when I've come home from work, I've found them badly bruised. Even with broken bones. My wife said they fell out of the high chair, or down the cellar steps. Once the older one said, "Mommy hit us," and she was called "a filthy little liar." Now I'm sure my wife has been mistreating the children because I came home early yesterday and caught her in the act. She says it's my word against hers and a man can't testify against his wife. Is this true? I operate a complicated machine, Abby, and I can't keep my mind on my work for worrying about the children. Can you help me?

WORRIED FATHER
DEAR WORRIED: Ask a lawyer (or District Attorney or sheriff) how to get your children away from a possibly dangerous and ill mother. They may need something beside your word for it, but they will advise you on tactics. And don't delay.

DEAR ABBY: The 52-year old woman who is pregnant goes my congratulations. She should be world famous. There are only TWO cases on record where a woman past 46 has had a child.

DR. K.
DEAR DR. K: What record? Many women are able to bear a child in their fifties. And have the "children" to prove it.

DEAR ABBY: I have just read the letter signed "ICEBERG" and it is almost a perfect report on my situation, except for a few details. HER husband bathes once a week. She's lucky. MINE takes his bath in July. Her man has 4 teeth. Mine has 5, and has never been to a dentist in his life. He also refuses to see an M.D. We have been married 31 years, have 9 grown children and 23 grandchildren. I keep his clothes clean and also his bed, but I will not share it. You probably wonder why I stay with him. I love him! But not a physical love. That's out!

The Amazing Mrs. Bonaparte

BY HARNETT T. KANE

From the novel published by Doubleday & Co., Inc. Copyright © 1963 by Harnett T. Kane. Distributed by King Features Syndicate.

FACT OF CHARACTERS
Betsy Patterson - A Baltimore beauty of 18, descendant of an old family, she concentrates her attention on her American suitors and chooses a worthy one as husband.
William Patterson - Betsy's father, who emigrated from Ireland as a poor boy and worked his way up to fortune. Now, in 1963, he tells even harder to maintain his rank as a leading merchant-shipowner in Baltimore.
Dorcas Patterson - William's well-born American wife whose submissiveness was tied to her acceptance of her husband's rigid supervision of their 12 children.
Com. Joshua Barney - Old family friend, now in the French Navy with Patterson.

Overhearing her father's conversation in his study with Barney, Betsy made up her mind to find out more about the other Bonaparte, whom they spoke of so mysteriously.

CHAPTER 2
BETSY PATTERSON returned to the garden and soon afterward Commodore Barney stroled forth from the house. Betsy knew she was there, Betsy had taken his arm.

"Now, Missy," he shook his finger as he spoke, "your face has a lot of questions, and I'm not going to answer them."

"What does Father have against Bonaparte?"

Thrown off guard, the commodore stammered: "Which one of em do you mean?"

Then something came back to Betsy. Recently Joshua Barney had been in the West Indies, serving in the French Navy with one of the other Bonapartes, and the two had become great friends. After a moment she recalled the name of Napoleon's youngest brother.

"I mean Jerome, of course."

"Ah, Betsy," the commodore's face revealed his surprise. "Once your Pa meets the boy and knows him the way I do, you'll see how right I am."

Joshua's lips clamped shut. "Girl, that's just what your Pa didn't want me to tell you."

Betsy stared. "You mean he didn't expect me even to hear that Jerome Bonaparte was coming to Baltimore?"

Commodore Barney grew still more uneasy. "I think he'd like you to know as—as late as possible, and see mighty little of him. Says you already have too many foreign and French things in your brain." His manner altering again, Joshua bent forward with a conspiratorial air. "Matter of fact, Jerome's in Baltimore right now, at my house."

Betsy found herself as intrigued as she was astonished. "How did all this happen?" As a precaution she added, "Oh, I won't let on where I heard about it."

Now that the truth was out, the commodore turned talkative. "Jerome's trip here developed on the spur of the moment, I guess. With war starting against England, Napoleon sent word to the boy to sail home from the islands. Jerome's begun to make a name for himself, but he's just a lad in his teens and a little of a scamp, you understand—fine-looking fellow, handsome as an actor, with a merry eye and a way of carrying himself. Likes a good time as much as the next one, and maybe more. Jerome's heard a lot about America and he never wants to miss anything, so he came here first. How long will he be around? Depends on how much he enjoys himself."

Cautiously Betsy inquired, "What's he going to be doing?"

"With everybody starting to fire invitations at him, even he doesn't know yet. Tomorrow, I'm pretty sure he'll accept, though, the races at Govan's track—a real field day, my girl. If things happen the way they usually do, a lot of the ladies are ready to throw themselves at Jerome, and I bet he's ready to throw himself right back. The commodore guffawed.

"Hm," Betsy Patterson's nod was perfunctory, her mood mixed. Joshua made this Bonaparte sound like someone she would be happy to meet, not to matter what his charms were, he would probably be a conceited fellow. About to leave, the commodore became apprehensive. "Now you won't go against your Pa's wishes, will you?"

On her guard, Betsy blinked. "If Father objected, what could I do?"

Her air of innocence did not entirely convince Joshua. "Missy, I think you could do anything you set yourself to."

Thanking him with an ironic look, Betsy went indoors. By now she had decided something; no matter what happened, she would meet this Jerome Bonaparte.

AT the upper stair landing, Dorcas Patterson awaited her daughter, and with her glance the girl sensed that Dorcas had heard of her differences with her father.

Mrs. Patterson's plump, usually placid countenance showed all of its tiny lines of worry. Absentmindedly she held one of the pieces of sewing that she nearly always carried, and with her free hand she gently thrust back the three young children who stood about her.

From several rooms came the hum-of-shell voices which Betsy always associated with the bustling household. In her early forties, Dorcas already had had thirteen children, of whom twelve still lived.

Skirting the girl who played with a rag doll on the floor, Mrs. Patterson preceded her daughter into the sitting room.

"Dear, I wish that you and your father wouldn't—wouldn't argue so much. It's bad enough when you're alone, but in front of people."

Betsy shook her head. "Do I did was tell him how I felt."

The older woman caught Betsy's arm, and her light eyes were pleading. "That's just it, you're too impulsive."

"Well, shouldn't everybody say what he thinks?"

Dorcas Patterson's horror was evident. "Certainly not. If we did that, half of Maryland wouldn't be talking to the other half. Remember that people can be hurt by needless remarks."

Betsy shook her head. "I wasn't being needless. Mother, I said what I believed."

"That only makes it worse," Mrs. Patterson's chin trembled. "Betsy, I know you have some fine qualities. Last month, when your sister Margaret got sick, you went without sleep, night after night, to care for her, and when the old lady came up from New Orleans—"

Embarrassed, the girl shrugged. "Please, I'd rather hear about my faults."

Dorcas Patterson replied with a shake of her head. "Sometimes you're your own worst enemy." She returned to the subject that remained close to her mind. "Your father wants only what's best for you. Do you see that he wants for us all the time?"

Betsy walked over to the long, dark sofa and punched one of William Patterson's captains had brought over from London. "Yes, but does he have to remind us of it so often?"

Dorcas Patterson's round cheeks reddened, and she answered in quick defense. "Mr. Patterson arrived in this country as a very poor boy, not yet fifteen, with nearly everything against him. He struggled in a way you can't imagine."

Breathless, Betsy's mother stopped for a moment, her look asking the girl to agree with her. "My life has been so much easier, and so has yours. We've never had to worry if the next ship was going to bring word that everything we owned was wiped out. Perhaps Mr. Patterson is a little—blunt now and then... try to understand and fit yourself to your father's ways, won't you?"

Betsy suppressed the response that suggested itself. That was the rule by which her mother lived her life, adjusting to others, accepting whatever came to her. But it wasn't her way, the girl mused.

"You see, Mother," she resumed, "some of us don't want to be ruled like children with a switch over them. Brother William and Brother Robert feel the same way. Even though they're older than I, Father makes up their minds for them, says who they'll see and not see. Up at seven for all of us, finished breakfast by eight, chores and duties till one o'clock, at the table from one-thirty to three, then—"

Dorcas' lips tightened in anger. "Enough. Anyway, it's time for your reading hour with Miss Spear."

Here was another of Dorcas' habits—the dropping of a subject that became troublesome. On an impulse Betsy reached over and kissed her mother's cheek. Taken by surprise, Dorcas murmured gratefully, "Thank you, child."
